Barcelona

Barcelona is a city with a Roman subsoil and a horizon in the 21st century. It's a place where people speak two languages, where Gothic architecture stands alongside contemporary buildings, where economic dynamism blends with intellectual effervescence and where the sea is a stage and the mountains its backdrop.

Museums

Barcelona is renowned for its cultural tradition with a vast and captivating collection of museums including the National Art Museum of Catalonia, the City History Museum, the Picasso Museum, the Joan Miró Foundation, the Science Museum and the Barcelona Museum of Contemporary Art.

Nightlife

The Barcelona night offers many more possibilities – theatre, cinema, flamenco shows, concerts and dancing at the discotheques. This is assuming that you've already had dinner. If not, you can start the night by choosing any kind of restaurant and specialty you like.

Site seeing

The Ramblas, a single tree-lined street that runs down to the port, encapsulates the character of the city. A variety of markets line the paved center of the street. It's littered with cafés, shops, restaurants and the covered town market runs alongside. To the northeast is the old town, where the elegant 19th-century Plaça Reial is a good spot to sit with a cold beverage. Just to the north, where the local government buildings are located, is the Barri Gòtic, a remarkable concentration of medieval streets and Gothic buildings, including La Seu cathedral and its impressive cloister. Once entirely enclosed by fourth-century AD Roman walls, the area principally dates from the 14th and 15th centuries when Barcelona was at the height of its commercial prosperity.
